Hi I spent all day trying to set up an FTP server on my FreeNAS without success. I would really appreciate some help, I am a beginner of FTP and networks so please start with simple problems and explain in detail when possible. In short, my goal is to share many/large files easily with a group of people (not technical) without exposing the rest of my personal files or creating security holes on my server or local network, the security of the shared FTP folder is not so critical (private but not sensitive files). So I am open to suggestions for something other than FTP if it makes my life easier and solves the task. Also tried to use its unsuccessful router FTP solution (managed to create a local connection). Some progress I was able to connect to the FTP locally using anonymous authentication but never using my or the new FTPuser account. I'm using filezilla for the connection but I also tried FireFTP (no difference). Hostname freenas.local Build FreeNAS-9.2.1.5-RELEASE-x64 (80c1d35) I know the version is starting to be old but has been stable so far so there is no reason to update it. My computer and server are on the same local network, both with fixed IP addresses set by the router (Asus AC66u with Merlin installed). I think I have correctly set the port forwarding in the router and configured the dynamic DNS (using no-ip.com). Further on this if I understand it is better/ easier to get the FTP to work properly locally before then we start from there. This is the error message I receive from filezilla when I connect to the local freenas ip address: State: State:to "local ip server address": "ftp server port number" Status: Connection established, waiting for welcome message... Status: Unsecure server, does not support FTP over TLS. Command: USER FTPuser Answer: 331 Password required for FTPuser Command: PASS  Answer: 530 Login incorrect. Error: Critical error: Could not connect to server So something is wrong with the user account. Same username and password are entered both in freenas when you create the user and in filezilla. So it's not just a mistake. I typed in the username and password several times and no change, so it must be some setting causing the missed access. Set the file local port number to the same number in the freenas FTP setting, root disabled and anonymous login and enabled local login, always enabled chroot. Is the user in the right groups? Are the permissions on the shared dataset okay? Please. Don't use the regular ftp. We have 2017... Go with ftps or sftp. Before answering the above question and then add security - please Gesendet von iPhone mit Tapataik I actually started for SFTP but didn't get to work. As I realized I only need to enable SSH on the freenas to get sftp to work but there was no field to set the folders there and from what I remember from a few years ago SSH went directly into root and I don't want users to have access there which is one reason why I went for the FTP solution, secondly that the GUI interface I seemed simpler for simple FTP (not that it helped)... If you have time please guide me towards a safer and longer term solution. Now to answer your questions: My folder structure looks like this: Volume/Share/FTP, each level has a group with the same/similar name is the user in the right groups? - FTPuser set to volume, share and ftp group - The FTP folder I mean has read/write/executable rights for the owner (my personal user) and the ftp group (nothing for others) The volume folder has only read and and Rights for the owner, group and other The shared folder has read, write and executable rights for all the owner, group and other users. Below this level (in parallel with the FTP folder) is where I have all the separate folders (documents / photos) with limited file permissions, so only the right users can access them. I can't remember exactly, but I think there were some issues during setup that forced me to set wide rights at the top level for all the work. I actually started for SFTP but I didn't understand it to work. As I understand it I just have to enable SSH on the Freenas to get SFTP to work, but there was no field to set the folders there and from what I remember a few years ago SSH went directly into root and I don't want users to have access which is one of the reasons why I went for the FTP solution by default when logging in with SSH (and then with SFTP), you end up in the Home folder of the user with whom you logged in. You only end up in / root if you log in with the root user. Dell PowerEdge T20 | Pentium G3220 @ 3GHz | 32GB RAIDZ1: 3x CT2000MX500SSD1 Boot: Samsung 840 EVO 120GB UPS: CP850PFLCD Ubuntu Server | Webmin Smart is not the whole story by default, when you log in with SSH (and then with SFTP), you end goes to the Home folder of the user you logged in with. You only end up in / root if you log in with the root user. Thanks I used the last time of user root. So I can easily direct the FTP user to the correct folder. I assume permission on other folders to interrupt the user from entering my other private files ãã but what commands can the ftpUser run and how to limit it (is required)? Or is root access required for all commands causing havoc? I found this example for the auxiliary parameter in the manual for FTP * Denyall
