Photo Courtesy: public domain/PxHere If you are looking to buy your first home or move to your dream home, buying a house always seems to take longer than expected. Although it may not be so bad if the wait meant just delaying moving into your new home, the extraction process can cause all kinds of other complications, from finding temporary accommodation to the always present possibility that the seller will return out at the last minute. Usually it takes a few weeks only to look at the prospective properties, followed by negotiations with the current owners who are not guaranteed to succeed. Since then, it still takes an average of 50 days to close on the new house. If all this seems too much, however, there are some things you can do to increase the chances of making a quick purchase. The fastest way to buy a house is to pay all the money for the property. Supposing all functions logistically, you can buy a house in a couple of weeks when you pay cash. There are some reasons why an all-cash transaction exhibits the homebuying process. courtesy photo: Alex Wong/Getty Images The reason why buying a house with cash is faster is that it eliminates the need to take a home loan, since the process of application and receiving approval from the bank may take a few weeks. If the creditor has to deal with many homebuyers, this process can take even longer. An all-cash transaction eliminates these steps. An offer of money is also attractive to sellers, since they know that you will not have to worry about guaranteeing a mortgage. Financing issues are a reason why many real estate transactions fall through, so if a seller receives both a money supply and another that depends on the buyer's ability to provide funding, the cash offer usually wins. Get pre-approved for a home loan before you start shopping Although the money is the king when you want to buy a house quickly, most people do not have hundreds of thousands of dollars available to purchase an outright house. If you need to get a mortgage to buy your new home, you can accelerate the process by getting pre-approved for a home loan (not to be confused with pre-qualification, which has less requirements) before you start visiting the properties. courtesy photo: Scott Barbour/Getty Images To do this, provide a bank with all the information and documents necessary to approve a loan, such as proof of income, bank statements and access to your credit history. They then determine how much you can borrow and provide a letter that states the amount you have pre-approved for. That's what this is.shows the sellers that you will be able to execute an offer that is made on the house, while the bank that has the information can speed up the process of approving the loan. Some banks may also be willing to provide a letter stating that you are pre-approved for less than you really are. This can be useful if you are worried about the seller thinking that you should ask for a bigger offer in response to your Amount pre-approval. Working with a real estate agent to find a HomeIndependent if you plan to pay in cash for your home or need to take a mortgage, a real estate agent can help you find a house you love as quickly as possible. Your real estate agent will ask you what criteria you want in a house, taking into account your ideal size, your preferred location and must-have features. They226; 128; then find properties that meet your needs and set time for you to see houses that le They are interested. Photo Courtesy: Joe Raedle/Getty Images When you find a property you love, your agent will help you prepare an offer for the house and negotiate the details of the deal with the seller. They can speed up the offer process and any further negotiation by providing information about the probability that the seller accepts your agreement. For example, if you226; you're buying a house in a market with limited inventory, your real estate agent will probably encourage you to come strong with your first offer. Your agent can continue to be a valuable resource even after you - they are under contract on a house, helping you with planned inspections and an evaluation. They will also try to deal with any issue that may delay your expiry. And the best thing? The seller usually pays the buyer agent226;'s through a commission on sale. While that commission is normally expected in the price of the house, you á€ (not only save time, but also money going with a real estate agent. Sell Your Home Before you start Shopping for a new HomeIf you currently own a house and can afford to do so, Consider the sale of your current house before you start looking for a new one. Otherwise you will risk that your old house will slow down buying your new home. Photo Courtesy: Joe Raedle/Getty Images For example, you might decide to include a contingency that declares your offer depends on your ability to sell your existing home. While this contingency provides financial protection, it can slow down the process of buying home, as some sellers can skip deals with this type of requirement. This in turn can increase the time needed to find a seller available.
