One. I'm not just a short story writer, some fictional writers told me recently, young authors who wrote one or two novels. I am hit by the statement, because I often wonder about this is "the difference between long and short form, process-healthy" and was tempted to make the statement, but I'm not ready to go there. I wrote short stories earlier in my life writing because, well, that's... © what they told us to do. And they were right. You need to work on various stories, nut soup, to improve craftsmanship and process, narrative structure, proofreading skills; To experience with voice, point of view, subject. Of course you can practice and develop all this by writing a novel; But it's gonna take a lot longer. Consider how many draft stories are partially or completely thrown into the literal and/ or virtual garbage while you discover what you are actually writing; How many novels do you want to write and sandpaper as part of your learning process before your resistance gives place to defeat? Practice works best on a manageable scale. But I never felt like I hit short stories. I published several, and even © I've won some priors, but of all the stories live written in, I'm probably proud of one, maybe two of them. A story, which won a rather prestigious prize, was so bad in my opinion, that I completely destroy copying and digital. (I recently contacted the publication that sponsored the prize, and they also © When it happened in the novel that would become a very long time for this world, it was liberating and exciting, All that room, the freedom to move between the settings, cultures, Perods of time, points of view. Three or four years working on something, keeping the notebooks full of idea © you went and sketches and scenes, filtering anything and everything the lens of the romance I'm working on; Indicting my mind and imagination in world layers and character and idea. This is my environment, I began to think; This is how I experiment life - great and confusing - that existence means to me. I am a kitchen sink writer: throw everything, all that you care in a world, interconnected, glorious heterogeneity; Then mold something like that. But look: I wrote a romance (and a second monster of a new draft), and I do not even â € m s really time to decide what kind of writer I am? Developing as a writer is really much about knowing himself; About the sweats of your strengths, not turning your wheels trying to be a different kind of writer than what you are. David meant he said recently on a New York podcast, referring to Raymond Carver  $\tilde{A} \notin \hat{a} \notin \pm \pm S$ tyle is a maneuver around what you can not deal. Barry Hannah said:  $\tilde{A} \notin \hat{a} \notin \pm \pm S$ tyle is a maneuver around what you can not deal. Barry Hannah said:  $\tilde{A} \notin \hat{a} \notin \pm \pm S$ tyle is a maneuver around what you can not deal. Barry Hannah said:  $\tilde{A} \notin \hat{a} \notin \pm \pm S$ tyle is a maneuver around what you can not deal. Barry Hannah said:  $\tilde{A} \notin \hat{a} \notin \pm S$ the short story is this miraculously compressed, elegant and complex, small and deep form in the sense; has the ability of perfection in a way that romance does not work as "up" Write a romance; perhaps my artistic trajectory is to work on my way I â € ¬ Å "Downà ¢ â € ¬ "To write beautiful perfect short stories. Who knows? I'm anxious to find out. 2. In the meantime, I'm lately obsessed, with the way we refer to as â € ™ ¢ A collection of tales on . â € œ as a reader and writer in development, I do not get enough this way: compression and vast heterogeneity in one! Terries in this type of collection can vary greatly in style, voice, point View, scope. Often they are kept together for a single unique Or maybe a place/culture; Or both. From the moment this writer sits aesthetically, must develop mentally according to the needs of the collection connected A© a potential new aatA© a homeateua for the development of handicrafts. If you and your world/your character have more business to deal with at the end of this particular narrative arc; or if this smaller character has been cut from a history, but is still breathing and pulsing and waiting to take the stage; Well, then you go to the next story in the cycle âindainda.â? Ãà ÃÃÃTo you you can write and sustain an isolated piece that is © by the energy of the voice; You can work to master the power of simplicity without sacrificing prismatic complexity. à Bae160; Oh, the joy, the absorption, the impossible goal. 3. Some of my favorite connected collections: Winesburg, Ohio, from Sherwood Anderson à Hahwood@ Fixe Short.-Bethesde talesaventaf short-lived af in the fictional inner-west city of Winesburg. A fide 160; We know many different characters, and all the stories reveal the essential (and ironic) solitude of living in a place where everyone knows their name. romantic, a masterpiece of the painfully grotesque internal lives of human beings. Ideas of the CA ©u by Joan Silber Fixe, both the way and the content are stunning in this finalist of the National Book © Louis 160; The collection is © subtitled by âHeengâ A Ring of Stories, Duma Octaocta and, in fact, is intended to be read in sequoia; a minor or car-stamp ing in a story becomes the heart of the next (and we start and end with a contemporary character named Alice). Between us, we cross sã© culos and continents, along with the timely experiences of © and passion, each novelist story in reach. Picasso said that a great work of art is to solve problems, because there is that not very provocative sense of integrity in Silber's work. Closing distance: Stories of Annie Proulx and Wyoming Proudiness © a brutal and unforgivable place, but it's not. © A place that we can all relate to some level: you can't be a rodeo rider, but you probably know what it is. © feeling hurt and embarrassed by the failures of hiding (and revealing) your deepest passions in a hostil e environment. I particularly love the diversity of forms within the collection; The stories range from two to 40 fronts, from fictions in flash es of acute humor to vast romantic screens. Mavis Gallant devotees, I don't know what took me so long to get to © She. Your stories I suppose are difficult in the sense that the prose is © dense, intelligent, original. This is not © Summer reading is. © The five stories of Linnet Muir are the ones I enjoyed the most and exemplify exactly what I love in the linked histories; Each story is alone, but together they sing. I recommend them to anyone who is tired of clever girl stories, but who wants to be inspired by excellent intelligent girl stories. I love the stories about a character called (Phillip) Leibowitz, both young and adult, including "Assassins", "City Boy", "Had Luck" and "Reflections of a Wild Child". Before he died on 2008, Michaels was also © m working on a healthy © a series of stories about a mathematician called Nachmann. A Josiat160; the reader lives in this comforting tension throughout, and enjoys it. A Louis 160; by the final story, our anti-hero calms down a bit, although (we find ourselves hoping) not much. Fidelity by Wendell Berry (Wendell Berry) in these five stories, Berry revisits the world of Port William, Kentucky, the territory of his entire fiction, and even© some of our favorite characters, such as Andy Catlett, BerryuÃna Your Persona presumed to be fictÃcia.Ã Baa160; Ã 150A Berry's fiction Ã. the way maybe just a farmer-poet a-essaãsta-fictÃcio activist can be. Stories of Anton Chekhov. by itself, but as I wrote in a previous essay here in The Millions about good ©, there's something to be said to read them in groups, in succession âââ as if together they make up their Great Novel, its population of Chekhovja@ of humanity â as flã¡cida and defective, yet seriously suspended in eternal longing. At NAS160As readers, we recognize that desire, its © and vitality. For last, there are many years i have not read any of these, but The Beggar Maid by Alice Munro and Dubliners by James Joyce are two collections of much acclaimed linked stories that are worth mentioning here.
