Thanks This article was sent to watch the company's Festival of the company Rapida Live Now.often, the more you are out of work, the more self-conscious you become about it. Therefore, it is understood that an interview question about how long you have been the job hunt can throw you through a loop. This week, Career Specialist Alison Green (AKA to a manager) helps a job seeker to figure out how to navigate complicated situation. I was called on a job I had registered, and they asked me how long I had been working. I was hunting for a few months, but I thought I could make it seem like something wrong with me and no one wanted to hire me, then I told them I started looking a few weeks ago. Logically, I realize that many people end up looking for a year or more before receiving an offer, so it should not be kept against you, but I do not know if this is one of these questions where the truth is © Ã € Sometimes a bad answer (as you are not badmouth your insane boss when asked why you want to leave your current company). When asked how long you have been work hunting, what are they trying to figure out? Does your response matter? Honestly, it's a strange question, and most interviewers ask. Who normally wonder why they are wondering if you are just in the beginning of exploring options and possibly inclined to spend a few time looking around, or if you have a search well in progress and can have a competing offer soon (And therefore, they may need to move quickly if they are interested). Or if you are unemployed there is a long time, it is possible that they wonder why they are wondering if there is anything else going on - if you really searched for all the time or if you took a deliberate pause for a while. In any case, it is true that you do not want to give an answer that make the interviewer think (even if only subconsciously) you have been looking forever and no one is interested in hiring it. Good answers are: â € œ¬ Å "I started to seriously looking recently, and I am being chosen about what I apply. Ã, â € œ "I have taken my time to make sure you find the right fit. Or, if you clearly out of work for a while: â € œ "I had the ability to take some time and now I'm looking forward to getting back to work.
