Continue reading the main story Open Google Translator or Apple Translator and your mobile device becomes your personal language interpreter. Apple Translate app can view the results in full screen mode (like Google Translator) and play a recording of the text. Credit. AppleNeed to have a conversation in a language you do not know, make sense of a printed sign or quickly translate a message? With Google and Apple reviving their machine-learning engines in their Google Translator and Apple Translator applications, there is a completely new world of communication possibilities right in your pocket. Keep in mind that computer interpretation is not perfect. You can get some uncomfortable translations (and looks). Third party applications can be more profound. But these freebies can provide a general sense of things and become learning aids. Here's a quick tour. Google Translator is in its 15th year and available on the web, as a Chrome browser extension and as an Android and an iOS application. Apple released its Translate application last year for iPhone and added it to last month's iOS 15 update for iPad. For simple translations into Google Translator, to the left, or Apple Translator, just select the languages you want to use and then type or speak the words you want to translate. Credit. On the left, Google; close to the left, AppleGoogle Translate supports more than 100 languages, while the Apple version manages 11. Depending on the app and language, an internet connection may be necessary, unless the content is available for download for offline use. Audio pronunciation or other features may not be available for some languages. And read the privacy policy of the app if you have data sharing problems. Left, Google; near left, AppleGoogle Translator and Apple Translator are quite easy to use. Just tap open the app and choose the languages you want to translate between. between text or say it aloud to get the translation via screen and loudspeaker. The Apple Translate app is now available on iPad in iOS 15 and provides a larger screen for two-way conversations. Credit. AppleBoth apps support a conversation mode, in which you can chat bilingually (in a supported language) with someone while the app automatically translates. Google Translate and the Google Lens visual search tool can use the phone camera to scan and translate text on folders, books, photographs and other printed material. Just open the camera app, point it at the text you want to convert and press the Translate button. It is important to remember that automatic translations are not perfect, that sometimes they lack nuances or contexts and that the results may vary. Credit. On the left, Stephen Barnes/iStock, via Getty Images; Google? AppleApple's Live Text, new with iOS 15, offers similar capabilities. Point the camera at the text and when a yellow frame appears around the words, touch the text icon in the lower right corner of the screen. Select the words to convert and touch Translate from the popup menu on the screen. You can translate text into photos in the same way. The Apple Live Text tool in iOS 15 is able to recognize words in images and provide translation services. Credits... The embedded translation powers also extend to other compatible apps. For example, in Google Translate on an Android phone, touch the Menu icon in the upper left corner, select Settings and activate the Touch function to translate. When you find the text you want to convert, highlight the words and touch the Translate option in the popup menu, then select the language you want. When you select the text in some apps (like the NASA app shown here) and touch Translate from the popup menu, Google Translate converts the in the supported language of your choice. Credit... Select the text you want to convert, and from the menu above, tap Translate. You may need to tap the arrow at the end of the menu to get to that option. When the complete Translate menu is displayed, you can see and listen to the translation and then choose one of the different options, including translation replacement. Tap the address bar in the Safari browser for an option to translate websites into other languages.credit... Appledonâ Therefore, forget that your virtual assistant can also be serviced. Google Assistant for Android and IOS has an interpreting mode to translate conversations into dozens of languages on request. Just say something like ", Google, be my Mandarin interpreter" and follow. Siri of Apple works with the Translate app to provide quick language tips and also say something like ", Siri, how do I say, à € À € ~ The nearest train station? In French? À € "The Google assistant, on the left, has a "Interpreter Mode" € to translate real-time chat. When required, Apple Siri Assistant may also provide rapid translations for certain languages. Credit ... Left, Google; Close to left, Applewhile The apps provide free-hand interpretations, there may be times when you want to type a language you already know (or don't). Android and iOS include both alternative keyboard layouts for dozens of languages. To add an alternative keyboard in alternative language in Google or IOS Gardboard for Android or IOS, open an app that accepts text input (such as your app), tap the Settings icon, Then languages and add the keyboard to select a language. Tap the three most icon points on the Gboard menu to get to a google translate option for thetyped. Google Translate, on the left, can translate the text as you type it. Both Android and iOS include dozens of keyboards in different languages for natives and novices to use, though not all keyboard keyboard are fully compatible with translation apps. Credits... At the bottom left, Google; next to left, AppleSu an iPhone or iPad with iOS 15, open the Settings icon and choose General and then Keyboard. Select Add New Keyboard and choose a language from the menu. Once the new keyboards are added, you can switch from one keyboard to another by pressing the globe icon in the lower left corner of the screen. And what if a mother tongue tells you that the translation of the app is wrong? Visit the Help & Feedback menu in Google Translate settings or report it to the Apple Translate Feedback page. page.
